ACADEMIC ARTICLES and PUBLICATIONS

Barbara Barnett’s article, “Framing Rape: an examination of the public relations strategies in the Duke University lacrosse case, was accepted for publication in Communication, Culture and Critique, a new journal of the International Communication Association.

Mugur Geana is author of two articles that will appear in the journal Lymphology. They are “Commonly Used and Preferred Sources of Information by Persons With Lymphedema: Findings from an online survey” and “Knowledge Discovery from the National Lymphedema Survey Data.”

David Guth’s article, “The Bay Bridge Metonymy: How Maryland newspapers interpreted the opening of the Chesapeake Bay Bridge,” was accepted for publication in American Journalism in 2008.

Tien Lee’s article on declining readership among young Americans has been accepted for publication in the Newspaper Research Journal.

Charles Marsh’s article, “Postmodernism, Symmetry and Cash Value: an Isocratean Model for Practitioners,” has been accepted for publication in Public Relations Review.

Douglas Ward’s article, “Capitalism, Early Market Research and the Creation of the American Consumer,” has been accepted for publication in the Journal of Historical Research in Marketing.

Perlmutter was guest editor of a special issue on Hurricane Katrina in Visual Communication Quarterly.

Perlmutter was interviewed for an article in American Journalism Review on the “Distorted Picture” of modern photojournalism because of digital editing technology.
Tien Lee’s article on declining readership among young Americans has been accepted for publication in the Newspaper Research Journal.

Kristen Swain’s risk communication research appeared in the proceedings of the National Community Readiness Communications conference, held at Kansas State University in 2006. The book and CD were distributed to scholars, journalists, health and safety experts, and government communications specialists around the U.S. in 2007.